Rome. Match 25, 1855 In the silent and mournful stillness that reigns over the seven hills of Rome, where all things are n decay and death, no ruin presents so much randeur in its loneliness as the Colliseum. Here all strangers learned and unlearned, scholars from breign hands in pursuit of the world's lote, the gaily dressed seeker of pleasure in fashionable life, the rich merchants on their way to and from the Orlent, the pilgrims from distant countries

-- all pay due homage to this Leviathan among he ruins of past ages. Letter writers through public journals have often described it—travellers have given descripfors of it, and organics have copied it time and again; but no one can apprecente it short of heholding it with his own eyes.

With the inspiration that fell from his pen,—o

who come here to renew their faith and strength

how few of the puels we can say tho same,—on a bright, beautiful night, Byron wrote on the sum wit the following truthful picture :

"I do remember me that is my youth,
What it was wandering—in such a night,
I stood within the Colneum's wall,
I stood within the Colneum's wall,
I stood within the Colneum's wall,
Midse the culef relies of similarly Rome
The trees which grow along the broken arties
Waved dare in the bless midnight, and the stars
Shous through the rents of rame, from afar,
The with-dog bayed beyond the Taber;
More near, from out the ceneral patere came
The owl's long ory; and interruptedly,
Of different sentines the fittil song
Began and dead upon the gentle wind.
Some typresses beyond the time-worn breach
Appeard to skirt the hor zim; yet they sond
Within a bow-shot where the Cae-are swelf,
And dwelf the timeless birds of night satisfy
An grow which is prings through lovelled battlemen
And twices its roots around the imperial harche.

I hope I shall be exceeded in quoting so free

I hope I shall be excused in quoting so freely rom a favorite author; but the descriptions and effections are so correct and in unison with my wa feehoge, that I could not resist. But the continued a reading and description which is too long for me to quote. After he has done so and reflected upon how much we are inlebted to Rome for all that is great in the arisand sciences, in religion and laws, he will indeed at this desolate spot with Byron feel and hum bly bow down

"With si'ent worship of the great of old; The dead but scepter'd sovereigns, who still rule Our spirits from their urns."

The object of this boilding was no doubt for the exhibition of gladintorial epectacles, the Remany being fond of such aports... but as the Empire waned, it became the theatre of scenes too revolting to be described, where human beings were made to contend with ferocious beasts, an where christian blood flowed like rivers of wa ter. It is said that at its dedication 5000 wild brasts were slain, and that the games in honor of the occasion continued for one hundred days.

Some 400 years after the reign of Hunorin the gladia orial combate were abolished. During the middle ages, the Coliseum was used for furt. Afterwards, during the long protracted siege by Robert Oniscard, it suffered much, and when it was finally taken by that lawless genend, who did not scruple to destroy the Roman menuments, any more than he did the temples of of some New York and Kenuseky juries in re-Pacetum, the western and southwestern sides

FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE OF THE SENTINEL RAMBLES IN EUROPE-NO. 17.

The Colineum Byron—uts Dimensions—its In-terior—its Objects—its Subsequent History— the Meta Sudans, Roug, March 25, 1855 In the ellent and mournful stillness that reigns over the seven hills of Rome, where all things are decay and death, no ruin presents so much grandeur in its loneliness as the Colliscum. Here all strangers learned and unlearned, scholars from oreign hade in pursuit of the world's lose, the gaily dressed seeker of pleasure in fashionable life, the rich merchants on their way to and from the Orlent, the pilgrims from distant countries who come here to renew their faith and arrength

-all pay due homage to this Levisthan among the ruine of past ages. Letter writers through public journals have ften described it—travellers have given descripdoes of it, and ungravers bave copied it time and gain : but no one can appreente it short of beolding it with his own ever. With the inspiration that fell from his penhow few of the poets we can say the same.-on a bright, beautiful night, Byron wrote on the summit the following truthful picture:

"I do researcher me that is my youth,
When I was wandering—in such a night,
I stood within the Colesum's wall,
I stood within the Colesum's wall was the stood
Waved dark in the bless midnight, and the stars
Shune through the rents of ruin; from afar,
The watch-dog bayed beyond the Thee;
More near, from out the Council palace term?
The owel's long ory; and interpuletally.
Of different nationals the filled song
Began and ded upon the gentle wind.
Some cypresses beyond the time-word brunch
Appeard to skirt the hor zon; yet they sood
Wilbin a bow-shot where the Council swelld
A grove which springs through levelled backene
And twiese its roots around the imperial hearth.
Ity usurps the laurel's place of growth;
I such a shad a shad a shad well a shad well.
A noble wreek, in ruinous perfection!
While Cowar schambous, and the A squaltan halfs
Groved on series in lockstimet decay."
I hope I shall be excused in quotting so free

I hope I shall be excused in quoting so freely rom a favorite author; but the descriptions an effections are so correct and in unusua with my we feelings, that I could not resist. But the reader should finish the author's description which is too long for me to quote. After he has done so and reflected upon how much we are indebted to Rome for all that is great in the arts and sciences, in religion and laws, he will indeed at this desolate spot with Byron feel and hum bly bow down "With about worship of the great of old; The dead but mapticed towardiges, who still rule Our spirits from their urns."

According to history the Colineum was com senced by Vespaaren about 1800 years ago, and Southed by Titue in the year 80, ten years after he destruction of Jerusalem. It is said that hopeands of the moor capture Jows were worked out their lives here in oppressive labor and with broken hearts in view of a hopeless captivity The form of it is elliptical and built of brick and a material called travertine—a sort of atone composed of petrofied lays. This stone is very mmon all through Italy, showing that at some early stages of the world the whole country was oleanie. It has four stories, is 157 feet high 620 eet the longest way, and 513 the shortest, and overs six scress of land.

The three larger stories are composed of archsaupported by piers faced with half columns and the fourth is a solid wall faced with pilesers. Each alternate compartment has a square wlodow. In each of the lower tiers there are 80 arches. The first tier is 30 feet bigh of the Doric order, the second 40 feet and of the Ionic or ler, the third Corinthian about the same heigth and the fourth also Cornthian 44 feet high.-Above this, running clear around, was an atticition the luterior of this yest building must have looked grand and imposing, with its 90,000 speccators-a sufficient number to have comprised equalous city | The arena was like that of the main body, in the form of an elipsis, 287 feet | in a sum not less than twenty-five dollars, and long by 180 in width. From this in a gradual secut to the top, were the seats for the people, being four tiers corresponding to the stories. These sea a were supposed to be made also with a view o accommodate the different grades. In the first story for instance there were three circular perticoes. At the base sorrounding the arena was a covered gallery 13 teet high and 14 teet broad on which it is supposed sat the Emperor, the Sens. tors and the vestal virgios. Directly above and separated from it by a wall, were three other orders of seats in attics or roofed gellories. The first | A correspondent of the N. Y. Jay¥. Some 400 years after the reign of Hunorine the gladia orial combats were abolished. During the middle ages, the Coliseum was used for a fort. Afterwards, during the long protracted siege by Robert Ouiseard, it suffered much, and when it was finally taken by that lawless genend, who did not scruple to destroy the Roman nonuments, any more than he did the temples o Pacetum, the western and southwestern sides er re battered down.

For hundreds of years after this period, the Roman princes supplied themselves with buildng materials to build their palaces, out of this ruin. The palace of St. Mark, the Farnese and the Barberini palaces were entirely buil

After these operations had been going on fo centuries, the Popes began to think of turning i to some good account for themselves. Pope Sextua V. undertook to convert its 80 ground arches into shops, to be used as a woolen manufactory, but after spending a large sum gave if up A hundred years afterwards, Clement XI nceived the idea of turning it into a manufactory of saltpetre, but also abandoned it. But in 1750, Benedict XIV., outertaining higher and note exalted notions of the fitness of things consecrated the building to the memory of the Christian martys who had perished withto its walls. The rubbish which had accumulated for ages was cleared away, and a cans taken to preserve the rain from further desecration from the hand of man, and also to protect it in many places where it was liable to perish, by falling from the state in which it was left by the enemire of Rome in the middle ages.

Since that time it has been protected from ato. Every Friday there is preaching there by a monk, who stands in a pulpit eracted for the purpose.

There is a staircase by which visitors can as cond to the summit, and from which they can only have a correct idea of its magnitude, and the imposing spectacle it must have presented

The lying vermin have not dered distinctly to deny one splitched for what I advanced; and the nearest approach to a contradiction of what I advanced is an unmitigated falsebood, and they know it.—
Hear them:—"The interview was granted, too, without the slightest intimation from Mr. Yates that he had been, or was about to be, employed that he had been, or was about to be, employed that he had been or was about to be, employed in violation of the constitution, when those violation of the constitution, when the same of the senter to a done. "we had nothing to make us even suspect that he came as counsel, but quite the contrary," de. It is true that the interview was granted without the slightest intimation from me that I had been or was about to be employed as counsel for Jones. and why did I not give such an intimation !-For the reason that not fifteen minutes previous to my call at the jail, Wessen -Sheriff's Clerk. and one of the Jail officers, or in communication with them-had been to my office and said that Jones had sent for me to come up to the jail and see him immediately, as his trial was set down as the next case, and would no doubt come on that afternoon. And now, these ignorant, innoin gangs upon it and that many of them pined cent, and truth telling 'Officers of the Jail' would have the public believe that in admitting speech shortly We will think of it. me, under the circumstances, " we erred, an broke a long established rule of the jail" ! Sent for by Jones, by Wassen as special messenger to come immediately to the jail, and that they did not" even suspect that he came as counsel!' !

What a silly lie ! But, Mesus. Editors, with these nameless and characteriess "officers of the jail." I have nothing to do. The Sheriff, whose employees and creatures they are, is solely responsible for their conduct, and it is he who is in reality to blame for this attack upon the rights of the accused confided by law to his care, and the rights of ounsel, and law and justice. But his suffering his subordinates to put forth such billingsgate against me as a counsel, and a citizen of long and known standing (how good or high let the public judge) demands of me that he should be trought his place, too. Although he has in charge, in part, the execution or enforcement of the lawhe is not above the law, and unless he ceases his practice of exponence, or taking more fees than the law allows, he will be called to an account, and besides forfeiting treble damages, be fined not more than two hundred and fifty dollars. If he desires to know the particulars of the case. where he took more than double the fees the law allows, I will state it to him in my office, or prove it in a court of justice. Several vocations upon precisely the same ground. But the truth is that no traffic in which men in-But the truth is that no traffic in which most agage for purposes of gain can be defended upon the ground of prescription or alleged respectablity. Every species must be measured by its nature of cushities. Whatever as permittons, indumna, themoralizing, debasing to society, soci ty may condewn and eradicate. No plea which she saide these considerations referring to the put its saide these considerations referring to the put its weat, is admissable. The Prohibitory Law connot be condemned because it touches their test of respectable persons, and destroys a business of long standing. If such views had controlled by inlators and reformens, the world would not be looked upon as a blow at the liquor-dealers. It is a statut of law entered for the public word. It is a statut of law entered for the public word. It is a statut. upon as a blow at the liquor-dealers. It is a state to law emeted for the public good. It is a state to born of a lofty desire to elevate and improve the condition of secrety. It is a law of which P. i. landbropy and Bendicence are the originators.—It has been carried to its consummation by earliest and conscientious men, deeply penetrated by the wide-spread and priofound evils that alcoholic drinks have caused. It is a law designed wholy for good, and not at all for evil. Does our correspondent? If may, then he has not of our correspondent? If nay, then he has not orground upon which to stand. If yes, then he him lay the Prohibitory Law along sade of he conscience, and interrogate that in respect to the character of its provisions. Does the law degrad and oppress the poor? Does it do viplence to the promptings of humanity? Does it aim to the promptings of humanity? Does it aim to realize and crush any portion of our fellow-man? Is it in any of its provisions at variance with the inshenable rights of a common humanity, or the cternal laws of God? If the conscience of a run seller can lay none of these things to its charge, then, Higher Law man though he be, he has no ground upon which to condemn or resist it.
